ACCEPTING OPPORTUNITIES

INTELLIGENT DIRECTION, DIVERSITY IN PRODUCE AND OTHER ADAPTABILITY LOW EXPENSES LEAD TO SUCCESS.

The low price of farm produce have disengaged some farmers, but the result will be an improvement in the management of farms. Low prices do not imply poverty for there are thousands of farmers with well filled granaries, who have more than enough for their support, but who can realize little for their surplus. While they may have more than enough in one or more articles, yet something else may be in demand. There is too much dependence placed on special crops, and diversified farming should be considered. Is there not something which the farmer can grow that he can sell? That is the question which is now most frequently put, and it is one that interests all. The most successful farmers at present are those who convert their crops into meat, butter and milk. This requires more labor than to simply grow the crop and let the labor itself rest with the product and its market. It is the labor that is sold in the manufactured articles from the factory, and it is the crop which requires the most labor for its production that the farmer is most fortunate in securing a return for his investment of capital and labor.

APPLICATION OF LABOR.

There is no industry that does not have its full complement of workers, but all manufacturers and their lines of goods when they have ready to believe that such work is to be done. The object is to have the farmer the only one. The farmers can also add to their list. Whenever they find that they are in arrears of the year when they have killed the first consideration should be how best to utilize such time. The minor industries on the farm are sources of profit. The keeping of large flocks of poultry is a winter occupation which should not be confined to women and children but be made a business, as there is nothing produced on the farm that gives so large a profit in proportion to cost as eggs. Give the flocks room, as is done for cows, put the labor in that direction, and make a business of supplying fresh eggs to customers, and there will be weekly returns at a season of the year when crops are not growing and when the labor would be thrown away, because it cannot be otherwise profitably employed. Lost time is lost money when the farmer cannot find employment.

DIVERSITY IN FARMING.

There is no stability in prices, and there may be a scarcity in some particular article at any time. For that reason the farmer should endeavor to always have something to sell, and not depend on one or two crops. If his granaries are overflowing he should increase his herds and flocks, as he can thus retain a large proportion of his crops for use another year in the shape of manure. This is no loss, though it is bringing in the profits somewhat slowly. There may be opportunity to raise an extra calf or calf, or the number of pigs retained may be increased. More fruit and vegetables should be grown, and the production of milk and butter be made larger. Where possible, given the quality will be improved, and there is always room for quality. Low prices do not result always from overproduction, but from inferior articles on the market. There are thousands of farmers who are to-day receiving good prices for their articles, but they sell only those that are strictly choice, and as there never was a time when the markets have been crowded with choice goods the object of every farmer should be to improve the quality of the articles he sells and thus add the sale of more labor to that which he takes from the soil.

There is no advantage in feeding corn that has been sown for fodder until it gets into the tasseling stage. Cows will not eat it unless half starved, and for the very good reason that it contains no nutrition. The corn that is best for fodder is that which has had enough room to grow so that it can set an ear nothing more than a nubbin. The juices of corn rapidly increase sweetness as the corn approaches the ear stage, and they are then nutritious food.

It requires good muscles in the hands to milk eight or ten or more cows in succession, and a milkman will endure a good deal of backaching without having the muscles of his hands rendered by the operation, as are the muscles of the lawyers and professional men who secure Presidential nominations. We had a friend once who said he could select the milkmen in any crowd of men by the firmness of their grip. It is as distinct, he said, as that of any secret society, though of course in a very different way.

Modern demands can be met only by modern methods. The successful dairyman must be a student of his trade, and the best results will come from the practice of dairy knowledge, and not from the tradition of the fathers. The producer of poor butter can not stand against the promoters and makers of substitute compounds. There is a call for the best skill from breeding time to market day.

Land plaster is very valuable on all our soils when used in connection with clover. It is not in itself a fertilizer but it takes up the ammonia, and holds it in the soil as a plant food. Chemists tell us that all vegetable matter while decaying generates ammonia, and as that evaporates at 80 degrees it goes back again into the soil by being condensed with moisture, then the land plasters it up and holds it for the soil.

Parasites are the greatest natural enemy to cows. More than two-thirds of so-called cholera is from ravages of lice. The symptoms are similar to cholera, but remove the lice and the birds recover without treatment. The cholera can be cured by a tonic made of copperas, one-half pound; sulphuric acid, one ounce; tin-tin iron, one drachm; hot water, one-half gallon; one tablespoonful to each pint of drinking water.

The real value of an article is according to the nutrition which can be derived from it. Swamp hay is of nearly the same composition as timothy hay, but the latter is twice as digestible; hence, it is largely used as feed, while the other is passed in the stalls for bedding purposes.

Grains are not absolutely necessary to support an animal in summer, but it affects the character and variety, and provides the stock with substances that may be lacking and required. A bran and meal mush at night for the cow will with a mess of ground oats occasionally, will be a relished and prove serviceable. Too much grain during very warm weather is heating, but it should not be altogether omitted from the ration of milk cows.
